Saxons persuaded them to return to Francia where, under the leadership of a chieftain named Weland, they finally fulfilled their bargain with Charles by besieging the Oissel stronghold of the Seine vikings, who in the meanwhile had sacked Paris in January While Weland and his men, their numbers swelled by the addition of forces from a newly arrived fleet of sixty ships, settled down for a siege, Charles raised silver and gathered livestock and corn for his viking allies so that the realm would not be looted.
